The Race Industry is a poem that one would assume is at least in part, autobiographical. It is a commentary on how society in London is quite authoritarian. You can read the full poem here. Form and Tone. Often Zephaniah can be quite whimsical in his poetry, but that is not the case here. The poem is quite bleak.

The Race Industry by Benjamin Zephaniah - Poem Analysis

Skypoet22 - Terse clever poem on speed, using racing (running) as an extended metaphor to conclude that either he started off too fast to maintain a lead and ended up last or in the particular race the boy for the first time emerged last. The last phrase of the poem "first to be last" lends itself to a double interpretation of meaning.
